

Jewish Refugees Reach the 'Promised Land' in a Time of Strife and Turmoil

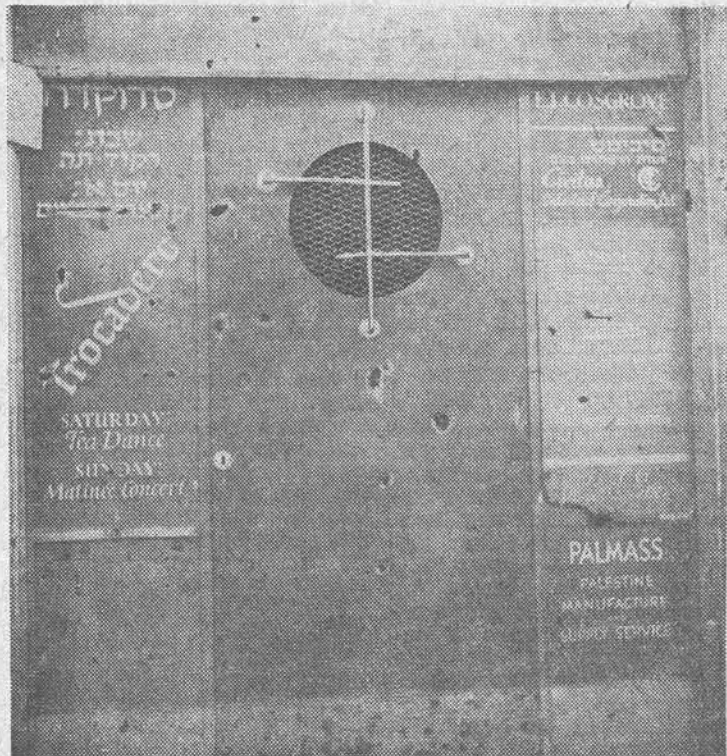

Refugees newly arrived in Palestine from British internment camps in Cyprus found one of their first jobs was a familiar one—digging slit trenches as an air-raid precaution

The refugees had occasion to use the trenches when Arab planes flew over. Agrobank has been nicknamed "Camp Bernadotte," because it was an internment center during the first Palestine truce

Despite the horrors of war, children will always find time to play. These youngsters at Camp Agrobank and their parents are being resettled in various parts of Israel

The door of a building in Jerusalem, which housed the Trocadero cabaret among other establishments, shows the signs of war—holes made by small arms, automatic weapons fire and mortar shells
