Non-Communist deputies offered Duclos the third vice presidency. This was a departure from French parliamentary tradition which in the past assured the election to the first vice presidency of the largest party—the Communists, at present.

Duclos replied that the Communists would accept no Assembly offices—a maneuver which raised doubts among parliamentarians over the right of the Assembly to function if the various parties were not represented proportionately in Assembly offices as provided for in the constitution.

During the heated debate, the session unexpectedly was declared adjourned by Communist Marcel Cachin, 78-year-old temporary presiding officer.

SOFIA, Jan. 13 (A)-Nine Depu PARIS, Jan. 13 (P)—Fist fights among the deputies threw a session of the National Assembly into an uproar tonight and the Communists righting for a key legislative office, broke up the meeting in a maneuver temporarily paralyzing France's law-making machinery.

The non-Communist majority in the chamber appealed immediately to President Vincent Auriol for aid in getting the Assembly operating again. Another session was set for tomorrow.

A Communist decision to insist on the re-election of their legislative leader, Jacques Duclos, as first Vice President, caused an uproar as deputies shouted and fought in the same session.

Griswold, chief administrator for the American mission to aid Greece (AMAG), announced the Greek government had agreed to impose bank credit controls to fight inflation and take other vigorous action "to help themselves."

A new army offensive was launched against a force of 800 guerrillas on famed Mt. Parnassus, 75 miles northwest of Athens, with an amphibious operation from the Gulf of Corinth.

Commando units moved ashore near the port of Iratini from destroyers, gunboots and coast guard vessels before dawn and occupied heights guarding passes used by the guerrillas, a military spokesman in Athens said. Troops, police and air force units began attacks farther inland.
